PREREQUISITE TRAINING: You should not use this program unless you have received intervention skills training through a program like Applied Suicide Intervention Skills Training (ASIST) or its equivalent. Persons at risk of suicide either in the session or among friends, family and loved ones may come forward or be recognized. You will have arranged for other resources with first aid intervention skills to take responsibility for meeting these needs. You need to have the confidence that comes from the training, even though you are not likely to be the primary helper. Nothing could send a more confusing message than a session leader who is frightened to talk about suicide in an intervention context where it is most important to do so directly and honestly.

APPLIED SUICIDE INTERVENTION SKILLS TRAINING (ASIST): ASIST is a two-day, practice-oriented, skill development program. Its goal is to help all types of caregivers become more comfortable, confident and competent at intervening in suicide first aid situations. As a by-product, it also makes ASIST participants more comfortable, confident and competent at talking about suicide in any context.

Your signature below and your use of suicideTALK indicates that you have completed ASIST or have equivalent experience or training. In addition, you agree that you will be the sole user of the suicideTALK materials provided as session leader for a suicideTALK exploration.
